What are these?

These are the stain from the seats of northern line

For two months, I relied heavily on the Northern line for my daily commute. Most of the train seats showed faded and worn fabric, unidentified liquid marks, food residue and unpleasant unknown smells. This made me feel uncomfortable and sick when sitting on them. This anxiety about the hygiene of public facilities and close physical contact made me question whether my fear came from these specific details, or from the abstract unknown behind the contamination.
